Pike welfare

Pike are our apex freshwater predator, which means that there are far fewer of them in any water than other species, and, in spite of their fearsome appearance, they don't always respond well to capture and handling. So, mindful of our need to look after these valuable fish, we ask our pike anglers to;

- Consider giving the pike a rest from angling pressure whilst they are spawning, from, say mid-March, to the start of May.
- Make sure you carry with you appropriate unhooking tools like forceps, pliers and disgorgers.
- Use barbless or de-barbed hooks wherever possible.
- Play fish hard on appropriately strong tackle, land them quickly, avoid unnecessary handling, and get them back into the water as soon as you can.
- Use an unhooking mat if you are fishing in a static manner.
- Consider unhooking pike in the water. These natural lakes have gently sloping shallow margins into which fish can be drawn and unhooked without the need for them to be lifted from the water.
